 The Norwegian Sea (Norwegian: Norskehavet) is a marginal sea in the North Atlantic Ocean. It is located between the North Sea (i.e. north of Scotland) and the Greenland Sea and adjoins the North Atlantic Ocean to the west and the Barents Sea to the northeast. In the southwest, it is separated from the Atlantic Ocean by a submarine ridge running between Iceland and the Faroe Islands. To the North, the Jan Mayen Ridge separates it from the Greenland Sea.

Stabben lighthouse is a leading lighthouse situated on an islet at the entrance to Florø in Flora municipality in Sogn and Fjordane.

The lighthouse was commissioned in 1867. Lighthouse is notched and stands on a high stone wall and has a low roof tower. The tower was built higher in 1905 and it was then set into a 4 order lens apparatus still in use. The lighthouse consists of the lighthouse, a boat and a landing that is tightly gathered at the small island. In 1975 the lighthouse was automated.

Stabben lighthouse is one of the most unique lighthouses in the country and the building covers almost the entire island. Because of this lighthouse is protected under the Cultural Heritage Act.
